The Newspaper Reader.

We were lately impressed most forcibly with the advantages of being a constant newspaper reader. Travelling some distance from the city by railroad, the seat before us was occupied by two men, both a large party of ladies and gentlemen from Melbourne, the conversation which sprung up between them comfortably dressed but strangers to each other, as Russell & Bro. showed. The conversation originated in some trivial remark, and both seemed equally fluent in making Jas. H. REVIEW OF THE WILMINGTON MARKET. FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 23, 1854

TURPENTINE-The Turpentine market has ruled rather steady since our last review. On Friday, however, an advance of 5 cents was obtained on the soft article, but on Monday it declined 5 cents, leaving the price same as quoted on this day week. The arrivals for the past two or three days have been light, and confined principally to small lots. The sales for the week ended to-day foot up 6,376 bbls., as
